by James Walker Reid & Julian Jahanpour

Time travelers from a future without love find the emotion they're searching for in a depressed college drop-out working at a space-rock store. Maybe the universe is trying to tell us something? A high-energy, brass-feature funk, eco-time-travel, musical comedy about finding hope for the future.

When college dropout Adam moves in with his space-rock-shop-owning aunt and uncle, the last thing he expects is an amorous encounter with an interdimensional medical researcher. Neither was a night with Adam part of the plan for Auriga. She and her Mothership crew must scan history for DNA to undo the damage of excessive cloning in the future, without leaving traces that would collapse their timeline. Guided by unknown spiritual forces, Adam and Auriga embark on a quest where the pair must navigate their feelings for each other while they receive a lost message for humanity; to save the rock-shop, themselves, and Life on Earth.
